REDEEMER ACADEMY ENTERS PARTNERSHIP WITH UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA

As part of its goal to set the standard in educational excellence, Redeemer Episcopal Academy entered into a consultation partnership with the University of Georgia's Department of Counseling and Human Development Services.

The Department of Counseling and Human Development, under Dr. Rosemary Phelps, and its Center for Counseling, under the direction of Dr. Linda Campbell, have developed a consultation agreement with Redeemer Episcopal Academy in which they will assist the school with academic evaluations. The department works with individuals of all ages across the state providing a wide variety of services from counseling to evaluations.

Dr. Campbell, director of the university's Center for Counseling and Personal Evaluation and Dr. Trish Klein, headmaster of Redeemer Episcopal Academy will jointly oversee the partnership.

"The assessments provided by Dr. Linda Campbell and the center's staff allow the faculty at Redeemer Episcopal Academy to accept children with a greater degree of accuracy and to address their strengths and challenges from day one," said Dr. Klein, Redeemer Episcopal Academy Headmaster. "By knowing areas in which a child is expected to excel or ones for which the student will require specialized assistance, the faculty are able to plan instruction accordingly. We are fortunate to have this collaboration with Dr. Campbell and the University of Georgia.”

Dr. Campbell has already overseen the evaluation of some Redeemer Episcopal Academy applicants.

“Redeemer Episcopal Academy, under the leadership of Headmaster Dr. Trish Klein, has ambitious and meritorious goals. The teachers, parents and students are all very excited about the educational mission of the school, and they evidence a strong commitment to its success,” said Dr. Linda Campbell. “The children with whom I’ve met also are very involved and engaged in their learning environment”

US News and World Report listed UGA’s Department of Counseling and Human Development Services as one of the top 10 graduate programs in its field. The faculty have received national recognition for their accomplishments and have contributed to numerous academic publications. In addition, the department’s faculty serve in leadership roles on both national and international professional associations.

Redeemer Episcopal Academy is currently accepting applications for the 2008-2009 academic year, but space is limited. For more information, please call (706) 484-1238 or visit the school’s web site at www.redeemeracademy.org.
